

Mission Statement and Editorial Policy Guide

SKREED.com is a modest online publication, updated on a monthly basis with one or more new features in each of its five main sections. It is pop-oriented, humorous, satirical, off-the-wall, irreverent, and always accessible. It is not esoteric, self-consciously serious or pretentious. Our masthead says "Good taste be damned" but we hope the actual content reveals the irony of that motto. Visually and functionally, its aesthetic is clean and simple as is befitting a professional newsmagazine and cultural journal, but behind the mainstream façade there is a subversive, iconoclastic, anarchic aesthetic mixed with a progressive, libertarian political ethic. We are outraged by the massive erosion of liberal democracy in this country and by the corruption of government by and for corporate interests. We channel that anger in a positive way through humor, art, wit and good intelligence and hope that in some small way we are part of a new enlightenment in America.

Skreed's content comes from contributing professional and amateur artists from all the humanities – journalism, creative writing, graphic arts, music, etc. Each piece is a feature piece. It may not be an opus, but we hope that each is something of a gem and as such be treated with respect and showcased accordingly to the best of our ability.

Skreed is a non-commercial publication. In other words, there is no revenue stream either in or out. The incentive we offer those who would add to our pages is to provide a quality venue, in association with other talented artists, for exposure of their work for the purposes of gaining an audience and promoting themselves and their work. Each article, at the discretion of the artist, will be accompanied by a generous byline, bio and link to the artist's site or email address. We will do our best to promote the contributor and any work or goods he/she may have to offer independently outside the site. We might even arrange to sell related goods on the Skreed online store.

We make no copyright claims on contributed content, therefore the contributing writer/artist maintains ownership of his/her material and is free to republish elsewhere.

Artists always seek the largest possible audience. We do not spend money advertising but we offer our contents for free. For that price it is an undeniable bargain. We have built and maintain an opt-out emailing list to which we email monthly html newsletters announcing the updated issue. But we depend on all contributors and readers to forward the information to a broader list of friends and other potentially interested readers. By offering consistent quality content we aim to increasingly expand our readership by way of grass roots word-of-mouth. We wish to continue to expand our reciprocal links arrangements, however we will be exclusive and not clutter up the site with indiscriminate links or unsightly banner ads or buttons.

You may contact Editor Bob (Rob Landeros) at editor_bob@aftermathmedia.com for questions regarding submission of material.